New women's studies director in familiar role

Josie Loza

Karen Falconer Al-Hindi, former interim director of UNO's women's studies program, has been officially appointed to the position.

Falconer Al-Hindi, who is also an associate professor of geography, began her career at UNO in 1993 as an assistant professor in the geography department.

Although Falconer Al-Hindi was the interim director for the program last year, a search committee opened the position for other applicants. Falconer Al-Hindi said 15 national applicants responded to the advertised position. She was an internal applicant and was one of three finalists.

"It was kind of nice to test out the job," Falconer Al-Hindi said.

The Women's Studies program offers all students a curriculum focused on the experiences and knowledge of women. In the spring of 1988, a minor was approved, while the major was made available to students in January 2001. This semester, there are five majors and seven minors enrolled in the program.

"Our number of majors and minors will only continue to grow," Falconer Al-Hindi said.

Each semester, Falconer Al-Hindi teaches an introductory course for the program. She said the position is made up of 25 percent teaching, 25 percent research and 50 percent administration.

"Survive" Homecoming

Rachel Wade

Strange things are going on around the UNO campus. Students walking around in fuzzy dot and rabbit suits, girls decked out from head to toe in pink, students getting hypnotized and made to make fools of themselves on stage. What does this mean for the student body? That's right — it is once again Homecoming Week here at UNO.

UNO's Student Programming Organization (SPO), which sponsors homecoming each year, is determined to make this homecoming a memorable one. With the "Survivor" theme, SPO is looking to draw more interest towards Homecoming Week and hopefully instill a little more Mav pride.

Senior Katherine Denker is the SPO festivals chair and was in charge of the planning and organizing of Homecoming Week. Kathy is excited about the theme and activities planned for this year.

"The activities we are doing this year are geared more toward group participation. We don't have the highest number of candidates, but we have a lot more people participating."

More than 400 people showed up to Wednesday night's "Camp Out Hunger" event, which was held from 8 p.m. to 1 a.m. in the Pep Bowl. More than 6,400 items of clothing and food were brought in by student organizations for the Open Door Mission. That night also included a dodge ball contest, a mascot and campsite contests. The winners of the contests will be announced Friday at the dance. Another exciting event during Homecoming Week was a visit by hypnotist Jim Wand in the MBSC Ballroom Wednesday afternoon.

Arguably the most involved group of student organizations would be the Greeks. Many UNO fraternities and Sororities value Homecoming Week and take a lot of pride in their respective candidate's attempts to bring recognition to the chapter.

The infamous guys in the doggie and rabbit suits, appearing in the MBSC plaza all week were freshmen Joel Hospodka and Ben Giese, proudly representing Steve Sladek and the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity.

"I'm more than willing to make a fool of my self for Steve," Joel proudly declared.

These guys were not the only ones out to campaign for their candidate.

Many international students leaving colleges to avoid potential harassment

Roddie Burris
Knight Ridder Newspapers

Two Saudi Arabians in Columbia to attend the University of South Carolina attempted to leave the country after the Sept. 11 plane attacks.

One made it home.

The other is being detained by the FBI in Atlanta, friends and USC officials confirmed.

One of the pair, Wafaa Alghamdi, a Muslim woman who was recently a graduate student, had filed a harassment complaint against four white male USC students over an incident that happened Sept. 12.

She decided to leave the country shortly afterward, said a friend who's a leader in the campus student Muslim association.

Her brother tried to leave with her, but was detained in Atlanta because the siblings' last name matched that of one of the Middle Eastern men who hijacked and crashed U.S. airliners on Sept. 11.

The Sept. 12 incident was one of "just a couple of very minor incidents against Middle East students" since the hijackings, USC spokesman Russ McKinney said.

McKinney said neither Alghamdi nor her brother is enrolled this semester. But McKinney said 12 of 83 USC students from Arabic countries have left to go home. Others are considering leaving, too, some Muslim students said.

According to a USC police report, the four white men approached the Muslim female on the Horseshoe area of campus and verbally assaulted her about her nationality.

They then attempted to remove the young woman's hijab, an Islamic head covering.

Fearing the worst, friends said the siblings decided to leave USC, but only found more bad luck.

McKinney and a Muslim friend of the girl said Alghamdi's brother was detained while trying to return to Saudi Arabia. The FBI isn't commenting on anyone who may be detained.

Sheima Salam, vice president of USC's Muslim Students Association, said the brother and sister share a common Arabic surname with one of the alleged hijackers. Saeed Alghamdi is believed to have lived in Del Ray Beach, Fla.

"It made me very sad," said Salam, a Muslim American who knows the pair. "She told me she had waited four years to get this scholarship (to study English in the United States). Now, it's fallen through the cracks."

There aren't any USC students from Afghanistan, the country where alleged terrorist Osama bin Laden is believed to be hiding. But there are students from Saudi Arabia, bin Laden's birthplace.

At least a dozen students from the Middle East have left the school since Sept. 11, McKinney said. More of USC's 71 remaining Middle Eastern students also plan to leave, Muslim students said.

"We're feeling a lot of pain from many different sides right now," Salam said.

"We're really sad about those people who lost their lives, we're really hurt about the attack on America, and we're really hurt that people who claim our faith did this," she said. "They brought our faith down."

But Salam said Muslims are equally hurt that all Muslims are being looked upon as complicit in the hijacked plane attacks.

Since the attacks, the Saudi government said it has offered each of its citizens in the United States a plane ticket home.

For students who are in the United States on government scholarships, Saudi Arabia will fly the students home and continue to pay them stipends for three months, an embassy spokesman in Washington said.

The students could later be flown back to the United States to continue their education in the same, or different, universities.

"We issued a notice to students in the U.S. to be cautious," said a Saudi Arabian embassy spokesman who asked that his name not be used because of security concerns.

The embassy official said 400 of the 5,500 Saudi nationals in America have asked to be returned home since Sept. 11.

The embassy spokesman wouldn't comment on whether the former student from USC was being held by the FBI. But he said his country is providing legal counsel to Saudi detainees.

"In most cases, we are being contacted by families back in Saudi Arabia who only know what they see on cable," the spokesman said. "We don't want them to be in anxiety over their children at this time."

Maj. Eric Grabski of the USC Police Department said no arrests have been made in the Sept. 12 complaint. But the case is under investigation, he said.

You won't sleep during Hoeger's in-class films

Josh Williamson

A child growing up in Southern California will have opportunities that children living elsewhere may only dream about. Some SoCal kids, like young John Conner of Terminator 2, have personal robot bodyguards. Others learn karate from their friendly apartment handyman, like Daniel LaRusso in The Karate Kid. UNO professor Mark Hoeger rode his bike onto World War II battlegrounds.

Displaced from Southern California, Hoeger now fills most of his time teaching students the fine art of appreciating films or producing local movies.

"My course is largely about how to read the text of a film," Hoeger says. "The methodology that I teach is applicable to any film, good or bad."

Hoeger teaches a course on film history and appreciation to a class of more than 130 students.

"Ten to 15 percent of the kids are interested in movies as a career, then there is a block that are just generally interested in the course to fill a humanities credit," Hoeger says.

Film history and appreciation isn't as scary as some other classes that will fill the same space on your transcript.

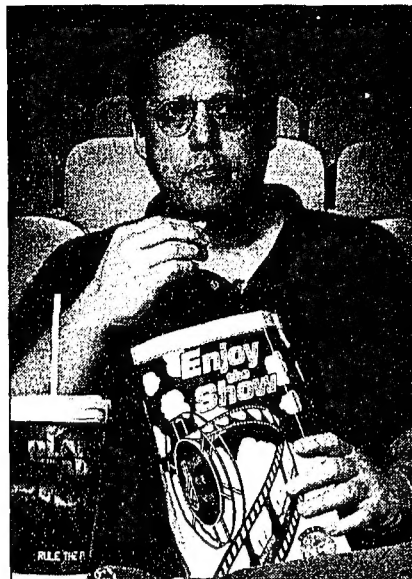

"People feel comfortable with the genre of films. You can take the same set of skills to analyze a film and use it for any other art form, because film is in fact art," Hoeger says.

Of course, there was a time when Hoeger didn't make movies and didn't speak to students about how to look at them critically.

"When I was a kid, I grew up in Southern California. One of my favorite TV shows was Combat!, a serious World War II drama," Hoeger says. "Whenever they needed external shots that doubled for France, they shot at vineyards about two miles from my house. I remember being enamored with the fact that this thing on TV was made by people."

Hoeger sometimes found time between trips to the vineyard to watch TV and go to the movies too. His favorites covered many genres.

"Mary Poppins was a great movie," Hoeger says. "The scariest movie I ever saw as a boy was The Invisible Boy and the first

Most of Mark Hoeger's favorite films are older than the average UNO student, but that doesn't keep him from going to new movies. Shrek is his favorite film this year. serious film I went to was Spartacus."

Even though Hoeger preaches the big screen gospel today, he says the small screen was really his favorite.

"I was more a creature of TV. I always dreamed of being Timmy on Lassie. Not so much of being Timmy, but the child actor playing him."

"I grew up with the great Friday night lineup that will never be rivaled," Hoeger says. "Jonny Quest came on first, followed by The Wild Wild West and then Man From U.N.C.L.E." Hoeger didn't turn to the movies because TV went downhill. There are still a few shows on he will watch.

"Band of Brothers is very good," Hoeger says.

Hoeger is currently working on a $1.6 million film, now in post production.

"It's a feature film called Full Ride, the first of many that we hope to produce here in Omaha," Hoeger says.

Hoeger filmed much of Full Ride on the UNO campus. Students have been involved in all stages of its production.

"Full Ride is about bad boy athletes with God-given talents who end up in jail," Hoeger says. "In some ways, it is the pilot for a much larger project." ☺

Names in the news

Knight Ridder Newspapers

For Andy McNab, the British Special Forces soldier turned novelist, truth really is stranger than fiction. In 1999, he wrote Crisis Four, in which Saudi-born dissident Osama bin Laden plots to blow up the White House and kill the president.

Now Hollywood is turning the book into a film.

Like millions of people around the world, McNab watched television in astonishment last month as suicide airliner attacks were launched on Washington and New York. "I didn't believe what I was seeing. I had just come back from New York, where I had been doing publicity for my latest novel," he told Reuters.

Crisis Four is the story of a British woman, the "beautiful, steel-willed, intelligent and cunning" Sarah Greenwood, who is recruited by bin Laden - America's prime suspect in the real-life attacks - to infiltrate the White House.

The book's hero is Nick Stone, an autobiographical figure. Stone, a former soldier with the Special Air Service, must find her.

Reflecting on the acts of mass destruction that provoked President Bush into declaring war on terrorism, McNab said: "I would never have thought of putting that in a book. It is stranger than fiction."

Sept. 11 had nothing to do with the film project, McNab said. "Negotiations had been going on for months and months, and the deal has been struck," he said. Miramax Films is acutely aware of the sensitivities at a time when Hollywood is shy of disaster movies. It has appointed a scriptwriter but has no production date. "Because of the recent tragedies, we will be handling the development of the project with the utmost sensitivity," said Matthew Hiltzik, a Miramax spokesman.

COURTROOM DRAMAS

Actor Richard T. Jones is suing to get out of his job on CBS's Judging Amy. The defendant is the series' producer, Twentieth Century Fox Television. Jones plays court services officer Bruce Van Exel on the drama. According to the suit, Fox has failed to develop and expand his character as agreed and has required him to work long days and during lunch. The studio also broke its promise to accommodate movie roles that came to Jones while the series was being filmed, the suit alleges. Fox assured Jones that he could be written out of the show if he became unhappy, his lawyer, Martin D. Singer, said. No damages are being sought in the suit, although Jones wants Fox to pay for the cost of the filing and attorney fees. Twentieth Century Fox Television had not seen a copy of the suit and had no comment, a spokesman said.

Actress/model Rebecca Gayheart, 28, could face jail time for a June accident in which she hit and killed a young boy. The Los Angeles City Attorney's Office confirmed that it was moving forward with a misdemeanor vehicular manslaughter charge against the onetime Beverly Hills, 90210 princess and Noxzema Girl. Arraignment is scheduled for Oct. 22. The charge carries up to a year in county jail, a $1,000 fine, and a one-year license suspension. Gayheart was cruising through Hollywood on June 13 in a friend's Jeep Grand Cherokee when she struck 9-year-old Jorge Cruz Jr. as he crossed a street. Several cars had stopped to let him go, but Gayheart allegedly swerved around the traffic and into a two-way left-turn lane, failing to see the boy. His parents, Jorge Cruz and Silvia Martinez, filed a wrongful-death lawsuit Aug. 6 against Gayheart, citing negligence in her driving. Gayheart, who paid

Capel Cottage Review
Column by David M. Johnson

- And The Carp Crapped Out
More than 19,000 fish were killed along a one-mile stretch of Brockamp Creek near Festina, Iowa, on Sept. 21. The cause — they were fertilized to death by cow manure. The Department of Natural Resources discovered that manure was running off the hillsides from a 270-herd dairy farm in Winneshick County upstream from the Turkey River intersection.

I can see the headlines now: Festina Fecal Farm Fried Fish Fiasco.

- Oops!
Rear Admiral Wu Fuchun, commander of China's East Coast Fleet was on a three-day goodwill visit to England last week. To honor his visit, Royal Navy Chief Sir Nigel Essenhigh ordered the Chinese flag be flown aboard the aircraft carrier HMS Ark Royal. As the dignitaries stood at attention, sailors raised the flag ... of Taiwan, China's deadliest enemy. To make matters worse, none of the British officers noticed the blunder until Chinese officers pointed out that was NOT their flag. "They were not exactly impressed," a senior Naval officer told the British press.

Not the way to woo Wu.

- Attack Of The Prison Guard
Donald A. Gorske, a U.S. prison guard from Wisconsin, has had a Big Mac Attack ... Gorske has eaten a record 17,500 Big Macs over the last 30 years. According to the Guinness World Record folks, Gorske has eaten an average of two Big Macs every day since May 17, 1972. A true connoisseur, he says the 1984 Big Macs were the best in terms of flavor, value, size and consistency. The most he has eaten in one day — nine. Uh, hold the fries.

- Rubber Check
India, the second most populous country in the world, has an extremely delicate and difficult problem. Close to 20 percent of the condoms sold there either break or spill. As a result, the government is planning to spend $25,000 to collect data on penis sizes. Scientists will take the data and use it to manufacture form-fitting condoms. "The condoms are currently made in a size specified by the World Health Organization and the International Standards Organization," said R.S. Sharma of the Indian Council of Medical Research.

One size fits nobody.

- Bee Buzz
Japanese runner Naoko Takahashi became the first woman to break the two hour and 20 minute barrier in the marathon when she ran a 2:19.46 last month on Berlin. Her secret — she drinks a juice made by giant killer bees. Scientists say this liquid reduces muscle fatigue and improves the body's efficiency. "It tastes just like any other sports drink," Takahashi said. "I've been drinking it for five years. It makes it possible to run." Did you say it makes you run, or gives you the runs?

- Great Lakes Shakes Awake
Dr. Keith Puckett, Environment Canada's manager of the Integrated Atmospheric Deposition Network, says the Great Lakes are in the process of cleaning themselves. Test show that large quantities of PCB's and pesticides are being released into the atmosphere through a process called volatilization. "Between 1992 and 1996, there was a decrease of roughly 10 tons of PCB's in the lake," Puckett said. Whatcha know, self-cleaning HOMES. ☺

Letter to the Editor

My name is Patrick Smith. I am a UNomaha freshman and I would like to express my disapproval of 'Dr. Luv's' article which was published in the September 28th edition of The Gateway. As a Christian and a firm believer in chastity, I found the article offensive in several ways.

He suggests to the female readers that men 'fall in love' with women who wake up next to them and fix them food. HELLO!! How can you publish that?

He seemingly advocates over-drinking as he writes that basically having a hangover Saturday morning is normal and acceptable. Then he goes on to describe a formula for seeming interested in a relationship in order to manipulate the woman into having sex. Come on! Now I realize that you have a little disclaimer off to the side, but use some discretion here!

I don't like his logo on the bottom of the page, either. It just reinforces the assumption that women are only there for one reason. This is obviously false. In a world where political correctness has become out of control, I don't see how you can think that this line of thinking could be mainstream among college students.

OK. I've said my piece. I have to go to class now. I hope you consider what I've written here, and I hope it leads you to consider what you're printing.

Jealousy: Life of a ladies' man 400 mg of misogyny is the cure to your woes

Throughout my years as Dr. Luv, I and plenty of my friends have come to the conclusion that jealousy is what happens when you're good at something. Be it football, hockey or pimping, there is someone in the dark corner whispering little comments used to affect your character, lower your demeanor and undermine your trust in others.

With that in mind, you have to be wary of the people you know. Your closest "friends" can become your biggest enemies. The issues of the heart often hurt more than we realize. So I will be a man and encourage others like me to apologize. I'm sorry for hurting people, breaking hearts. I'm sorry you dumb broads had hope of me loving you — dummy. I'm sorry I stole your girlfriend; you weren't man enough to keep her. I'm sorry. I'm sorry. I'm sorry.

OK, enough of that, so please stop with the hatred. When you hate, you show others that you're a hater, and showing that you're a hater forces others to hate, so please don't play a hate — participate. On to a letter.

Dear Dr. Luv:

I'm a freshman here at UNO and to be honest, I've had a lot of "unlucky" cases in relationships so far in my life. I really don't know what to do about it, either. I'm not a shy girl like most guys want. I am not submissive or quiet; actually, I'm slightly aggressive and I love to talk, when you get to know me. I like a guy who is in many ways similar to that as well. I like big, strong, handsome, dark hair, dark eyes ... y'know, the typical hottie. So here I am at UNO with my dating pool broadening every day and the only thing I want is out of reach. The lucky contestant is a football player at UNO. He's so handsome! Tall! Dark hair and eyes! And my word ... he is built! I really want to attempt a relationship with him, but I'm afraid he's like every other guy — "I like my girls anorexic thin, long curly hair, shy and will do what ever I say." I'm not a bad catch, Doc. I'm 5'4", 130 lbs, long brown hair, brown eyes, tan complexion. I have a great sense of humor and I also love to work out. Extra bonus: big boobs. I don't see what's wrong with me, but maybe I'm being too conscientious of myself. I did talk to him and asked him if he wanted to hang out sometime.

He said sure, but never e-mailed me back or ever mentioned a time or anything. I'm going crazy every time I see him! But I always try to keep my cool. Please help me in some way!! I don't know how to bring out that forward girl who's in me and say, "Hey, you...me...now!"

First, I would like to say I'm happy to hear from a woman who wants to take the initiative in getting the guy she wants. What I suggest for your very situation is to play poker — put all the cards on the table, take a risk and lay it all on the line. I would rather be dissed and embarrassed than continue wondering "What if?" Try your luck and get this jock and may you live happily ever after. ☺

STONE UPDATE

Despite initial tests showing that actress Sharon Stone may have suffered a "tiny aneurysm" over the weekend, the cause of her mysterious brain ailment remains unknown. Stone, 43, who was rushed to a San Francisco hospital Saturday with severe head pains, underwent more testing Monday that showed she had a subarachnoid hemorrhage. While that can sometimes stem from a brain aneurysm, her publicist says doctors still haven't figured out the exact cause. She is to get another angiogram on Friday.

With Michael Jordan back in the NBA, what will they do to the Michael Jordan to the Max IMAX film that is playing nationally? "I don't think we need to do a sequel or add an appendix to it," Don Kempf, who with brother Steve produced the IMAX film, told the Chicago Tribune. "The story is self-contained. It's about Michael the person - the integrity of Michael. Quite honestly, (Jordan's comeback) is great for the film. The fact of the matter is that any exposure and visibility that Michael gets will be phenomenal for all his products."

The program has 50 faculty members and nearly 50 courses have been approved for the upcoming year. The program offers about 10 per semester.

"The program is adding faculty and courses all the time," Falconer Al-Hindi said. "We have approved four new courses [for the spring semester] and one new faculty member."

Falconer Al-Hindi described herself

"The courses are very popular," Falconer Al-Hindi said. "It's usual for us to have [fall] courses closed in July."

The women's studies program hosts a major event during both the fall and spring semesters. Both are free of charge and open to the general public. The first presentation will be Friday, Oct. 19. Poet Freya Manfred will exhibit a selection of her works. The program will be cosponsored with the Western Literature Association Conference.

The spring program will be on the evening of March 5. Adilah Barnes will present her one-woman show, "I am that I am Woman, Black," by acting out the stories of famous black women. Falconer Al-Hindi said the women's studies program will cosponsor the event with other university departments. ③

And then there was Pussy (Nashville, that is) review/interview by

Josh Williamson

It takes an obscene name like Nashville Pussy on the marquee to prepare someone for what happened at the Ranch Bowl Wednesday night.

The four-band concert started off slow, with local band Drive-by Honkey drawing only a few people from the bar to the dance floor. The Carsinogens, second in the lineup, had to wean the crowd off the Honkey's bad vibe. Eventually, the singer's guttural vocals had most of the floor space filled up with thrashing bodies. The last of the opening bands, The Filthy Few, got a jump on Halloween. The singer came out in a shaggy fur green suit, eventually stripping to a diaper along with the drummer. The guitarist wore a sombrero and executioner's mask throughout the show.

And then there was Pussy.

After more than an hour had passed since The Filthy Few's exit, Nashville Pussy took the stage. Lead vocalist Blaine Cartwright came out first in snakeskin boots and an old Metallica T-shirt. Bandmate and wife Ruyter Suys, drummer Jeremy Thompson and bassist Tracy Almazan followed.

Starting strong, Pussy opened with "Say Something Nasty," which seemed to set the mood for the remainder of the evening. The band's performances was quite physical and a tad sexual. Songs like "Strutting Cock" and "Piece of Ass" might not be enough to make some hardasses blush, but Suys' climactic beer bottle blow job would definitely leave most people wide-eyed. Suys also got a little familiar with some of the front row audience members. She played on the edge of the stage for much of the show, allowing hands to wander and grope whatever they could

If you have noticed a naked quality in Omaha's streets and offices, it can be easily explained. Those eccentric shadows that have become such a normal part of Omaha's streets over the past six months have been towed away.

This past Saturday, 65 area J. Doe sculptures were auctioned off at The Rose Theatre, with proceeds being split equally among the artist, the donor's philanthropy of choice and the Omaha Public Arts Commission.

"Auctions are exciting all around," said Becky Brown, J. Doe Unification artist, as she waited in anticipation for her mirror-tiled J. Doe to arrive safely at The Rose, as well as the overall thrill the evening would offer.

Entertainment and energy were well dealt at the auction Saturday evening as J. Does were sold at prices ranging from $1,500 to more than $8,500. Bidders were smoothly coaxed to bid higher by the fast-talking auctioneer and his sidekicks, who were spread around the audience. "It's only money!" became a key phrase as the evening went on.

The night consisted of bittersweet emotions as artists stood hopeful and proud near their J. Doe creations as they were auctioned off on stage. Many caressed and comforted their J. Doe like a parent on their child's first day of school, while others hyped the entertainment value by dressing like their J. Doe or dancing around it, emulating a secret dance only a creator would know.

Being able to communicate with people who are excited about the J. Doe Project and having kids tell her Unification was their favorite had been rewarding aspects of her involvement in the project, Brown said.

"I originally thought my idea wouldn't be picked. When the second call came around, I figured I'd just try it ... It's been super cool and I encourage others just to give it a shot because you never know."

Even though Brown's Unification was blessed by not being run over by a random vehicle and was able to stand confidently in the water downtown on The Mall, Unification did have its share of visitors.

Brown remembers her encounter with a homeless man who approached her while she was fixing cracks on Unification. He kept pointing to the feet of her J. Doe. It seems that as people had been tossing wishing-change to Unification, the man had been collecting the coins, which gave an explanation for why the coins accumulated but always seemed to disappear. How apropos this meeting was considering Brown intended her Doe to communicate interconnectedness of the viewers.

The project as a whole allowed artists to experiment with different techniques and grow as creative individuals, as well as an artistic community.

"It's the first time I've had to propose something and see it through to its finish," Brown said. "In your mind, it's easy to see it as this cool thing but there were practical problems that had to be worked out."

There may have been problems, but they were definitely solved. As Unification was introduced for bidding, it was welcomed with applause by the eager audience.

Brown extends a big thank you to everyone who supported the J. Doe Project.

"It was definitely so much fun to be part of a larger group," Brown said. "You eventually learn that it's really all a small drop of water in a big pond." ☺

Ghetto Fabulous

Thick black and white lettering adorns the cover of this album, pronouncing a parental advisory for explicit content. This 13-track CD is hardly worth the effort it takes to rip the tight plastic from the outside. The hit radio songs may be enticing at first, but after the catchy tunes and popularity wear off, you're left with cuss words and gibberish slang.

The hard-thumping rhythm is far from original and seems to only be valid in one area: creating bass vibrations in car stereos. One of the only perks offered on this CD is the enhanced CD-ROM version of "Can't Deny It," a song that can be heard on many area radio stations.

In addition, this album also features other hits such as "Keepin' It Gangsta" and "Take You Home."

This album offers a beat to bounce to, but if lyrical content is the goal, one may want to look elsewhere for something that will do the trick.

'N Sync ... I think not. This album is purely for the techno lover. The music pulsates with fast rhythm and hip-hop tempo.

It's composed using a variety of instruments to create the upbeat audio compilation — instruments such as drums, bass and keyboard and vocals support the majority of the songs. A few songs are accompanied by the trumpet and guest vocalists who add a variety to this 12-track disc.

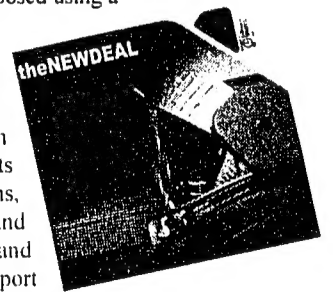

This would be a fabulous selection for that special dance party, but lacks the quality musical aspects to become an everyday favorite.

Jazz, soul and pop bring an original and surprising sound to Permanent. This release includes six tracks that are sure to calm anyone's nerves.

Crawford delves into dazzling new realms of music, creating a compilation that is entirely her own. Recorded in London by producer Pete Smith, the album highlights a spectrum of rhythm and lyrics that are distinct in every aspect.

Tracks that standout include "Alfie," "Tell It to Your Heart" and "I Get A Little Burned." These three tracks are distinctive renditions that spark inspirations and pleasing thoughts. ☺

'I'm just seven hours old ... truly, beautiful to behold'

Bobbi McCollum

"There's no actual sex, but there's a nice dry-humping section," Stages of Omaha's Nichole Nelson said in reference to the Millenium Theatre's upcoming production of The Rocky Horror Show.

It's been 12 years since the rock musical/cult classic has been performed in Omaha, but it's back with a vengeance, having nearly sold out several nights even before the tickets officially went on sale.

The script for Stages of Omaha's version of Rocky Horror is almost exactly that of its cinematic partner, The Rocky Horror Picture Show, with the exception of an extra song. However, the setting has been transferred into the present, abandoning its retro threads.

"We've updated it to more of a Marilyn Manson type show than a '70s glitter and glamour," director Jerry Ditter says.

A special show requires a special cast. To find such talent meant requiring the 35 people who auditioned for the 15 roles to sing two contrasting pieces and do several cold readings.

"It's a lot of improv when you do cold readings because you don't get the direction of it," Nelson says. "You have the words on the page, but you can really just do what you want, and that's really what leaves the impression on a person is being as flamboyant and out there as you possibly can."

Those auditioning were also judged on their physicality because Ditter wanted only the most extreme of body types.

"We made sure they physically looked different than most people would cast," Ditter explains.

"I'm not going to call my cast freaks, but they have something different about them. They're quirky and they're very sexual.

They're very open and you have to be with this show. No prudes with this one."

The first week of the five-week-long rehearsal schedule was spent doing trust exercises and learning how to be sexual without harassing.

"There's a fine line between acting and being sensual rather than being just nasty," Nelson says. "I think everyone's got a really firm grip on that. You get the apologies out of the way at the beginning. It's like, 'Okay, we're gonna grab breasts, we're gonna grab crotches.'"

After becoming comfortable enough to touch each other all over, the cast did a read-through and began to block. Because the set is so intricate and there is such a large cast on a small stage, the blocking became very technical.

"We've updated it to more of a Marilyn Manson type show than a '70s glitter and glamour."

director Jerry Ditter

"Being on stage and working together with all of these other people to come together for one common goal, to put on a show, is just an adrenaline rush like you can't find anywhere else," Nelson says.

"And with this show particularly, being on stage and just the sexual tension that's there and the excitement of everyone who is just so thrilled to be a part of this show ... it's an experience that defies words."

Nelson, who is playing the part of Magenta, explains that she finds "The Time Warp" to be her most challenging scene because her costume consists of knee-high patent leather boots with a 5-inch block on the bottom.

"Just maneuvering in those, doing all of the dancing and stuff and singing at the same time is kind of difficult," Nelson says. "And then there's knowing when to play with people and knowing when to let other people play with them."

The Rocky Horror Show runs Oct. 4 to Nov. 3 at The Millenium Theatre. Show times are Thursday and Friday nights at 7:30 p.m. and Saturday nights at 7 and 10 p.m. For more information, call 345-8166.

The UNO cast includes Kim Amandus, Sarah Brown, Melanie Gillis, Jaime Godby, Kelli Hahn, Deb Radloff, Molly Welsh, Suzanne Withem, Rachel Wood, Jen Elsasser, Bethany Felts, Kris Kelly and Jenny Pool.

How Ben Stiller kept Zoolander all in the family

Mike Szymanski
Zap2it.com

For Ben Stiller, his movie Zoolander - about a bungling male supermodel - is definitely a family affair.

Not only is Stiller himself the star, the director, co-writer and co-producer, but lots of his family and friends are involved in the production. Here's a run-down:

Stiller's dad, Jerry Stiller, is a recognizable character actor from Seinfeld as well as movies such as The Ritz, Hairspray and Airport 1975. He plays Ben's agent, and says about the filming: "At the beginning I was very wary of what it would be like. When we first got on the set, I felt more nervousness than usual because I realized Ben was not only the actor I was working with, but he was the director. But then we started working and he said, 'Dad would you do it a little faster? And I realized he wasn't treating me any differently than anyone else. He was just using the world, 'Dad.'"

Stiller's wife, Christine Taylor, plays Time magazine journalist Matilda, Ben's love interest. She was Marcia in the "Brady Bunch" movies.

Ben Stiller enlisted the help of friends and family to star in his new comedy Zoolander.

Stiller's dog, Kahlua, is the Coal Mine Tavern dog. One night, long after all her scenes were finished, Stiller called his wife and Taylor says, "Ben really wanted to get Kahlua, our Chocolate Lab in the shot. I was a little worried, because our dog is in no way, shape or form trained for movies. But Ben and I stood off-camera and called her back and forth, and she was so obedient! It was the most well-behaved she's ever been and we were so proud."

Stiller's best friend, Justin Theroux, who's in Mulholland Drive and is a writing partner of Ben's.

Stiller's past producer Scott Rudin, also produced The Royal Tennenbaums which Stiller starred in.

Stiller's multiple co-star Owen Wilson, who plays his arch-nemesis model Hansel, and has co-starred with him in five films including: The Cable Guy, The Royal

As crazy as the band could be on stage, one must wonder what happens on the road, between the gigs and after the last encore is over. But when a band gets to be a teen-ager, certain aspects of the road get old.

"We try to make our time on the road like home life as much as possible," Cartwright said. The road life is the normal life for Nashville Pussy, as they are constantly touring.

"I have a hard time sitting in one place," Cartwright said. "We all do."

Not much phases the Atlanta band anymore; they've seen the world and all its craziness.

"We toured Canada," said Cartwright. "There are a lot of freaky people there. I love Canada, but the people are just a little too backwoods."

While opening for Slayer in Scotland, a fan imprinted a lasting memory with the band.

"Some guy vomited in a plastic cup and threw it on stage," Cartwright said. "It hit the bass amp and just splattered everywhere. This crowd was throwing shit the whole show. Ruyter was nearly knocked out by a flying pitcher of beer that hit her in the head." The band couldn't keep from yelling at the audience for its antics, evoking boos and moans.

"We cussed the audience out but we won them over by rocking hard," Cartwright said.

Nashville Pussy is due for a break in a few weeks, but will be right back on the freaky road again when the blisters heal and headaches fade.

"During the first couple of years, I was thinking f-k it," Cartwright said. "But then we keep going." ☸ Tennenbaums, Permanent Midnight and Meet the Parents.

Stiller's past co-star, Will Ferrell, plays designer Mugatu, the bad guy in this movie. They co-starred in The Suburbans and when Stiller hosted Saturday Night Live, Ferrell was part of the cast.

Stiller's future co-star, Garry Shandling who's in the upcoming movie Run, Ronnie, Run set for 2002.

Stiller's tit-for-tat cameo appearance friend, Andy Dick, who plays the big female masseuse in a non-speaking cameo. Stiller has returned the favor by appearing as himself on "The Andy Dick Show."

Other cameos in the film include: Stephen Dorff, Sandra Bernhard, Christian Slater, Cuba Gooding Jr., Gwen Stefani, David Bowie, Donald Trump, Billy Zane, Claudia Schiffer, Veronica Webb, Tommy Hilfiger, Tom Ford, Tyson Beckford, Steve Kmetko, Natalie Portman, Fabio, Lenny Kravitz, Lukas Haas, L'il Kim, Lance Bass and the band the Little Kingz. ☸

Head coach Pat Behrns' team is coming off yet another come-from-behind win, this time 29-27 over Northern Colorado.

MSU opened their season with three straight losses, but has since won two consecutive games. The Minnesota Mavericks downed New Haven (Conn.) 14-13 last week.

Quarterback duties for head coach Dan Runkle's MSU Mavericks are shared between Andrew Shea and redshirt freshman Evin Baylis. Andrew has seen most of the action. The 6-foot-1, 195-pound junior is 50-104-3 for 636 yards and three touchdowns. Baylis is 21-51-2 for 240 yards and one score.

MSU does have an excellent receiver in junior Dan Weldon. In five games this season, Weldon has already pulled in 34 catches for 401 yards and three touchdowns.

Running the ball for the "other" Mavs are sophomore Bobby Ruffin and junior Arlin Slayton. Ruffin (472 yards rushing, 4 TDs) has done the most damage.

Kicking the ball is junior Paul Barenz.

He's had an up-and-down year, hitting 3-6 field goals and 8-9 PATs.

Defensively, MSU looks to redshirt freshman Charles Chaney, sophomore Jared Ziemke and junior Andrew Tippins to stop the opponents' offense.

Chaney and Ziemke lead the team with 34 tackles each. Chaney has recorded three sacks. Ziemke has intercepted three passes.

Tippins has 31 tackles to his credit, including 13 for loss. He leads the team with 5.5 sacks.

Both UNO quarterbacks, Seth Turman and Trey Guidry, are slated to see action Saturday. Turman, the senior, has demonstrated late game leadership skills to put the Mavs in place to win their games. He also leads the team with six rushing touchdowns.

Guidry, the sophomore, has been more effective at times moving the team down field. Neither has been able to develop a strong passing attack.

Despite the fact UNO has won the last four meetings between the two teams, MSU holds the overall lead 10-9.

UNO defeated MSU 31-10 last year in Mankato, racking up 415 yards in total offense.

The UNO Mavs will be able to rest up after this game. They take a week off before traveling to Grand Forks to take on North Dakota Oct. 20. B

Third Weekend Road Trip

Leia Baez

Volleyball

The UNO volleyball team will travel to North Dakota State for a match against the NDSU Bison on Fri., Oct. 5, at 7 p.m. North Dakota State is currently 5-1 in the North Central Conference and 16-3 overall. Before the Oct. 2 AVCA poll was released, the Bison were ranked seventh in the D-II nation. NDSU has been bumped down a position by Metro State and is now ranked eighth in the AVCA. However, the Bison still remain the top team in the NCC.

The Mavs won't end the trip there. UNO will face the North Dakota Fighting Sioux on Sat., Oct. 6, at 7 p.m. North Dakota is currently 3-4 in the NCC and 15-6 overall.

The UNO Mavs are 1-4 in the North Central Conference and 2-11 overall. However, UNO leads the all-time series with NDSU 36-28, including a pair of wins over the Bison last season. Unfortunately, the UNO volleyball team is on a three-match losing streak. Without All-American Nikki Mastny, who was a large part in the Mavs' wins against NDSU last season, the Mavs will likely have a hard time pulling out with a victory.

While the majority of the Mavs are freshmen, the seniors run the show for NDSU. Senior Rachael Schmieg leads the Bison with 3.28 kills per game and 3.38 digs per game. Schmieg received the NCC player of the week award for the week of September 17. Senior setter Kathleen Hegg leads the squad with 7.10 assists per game and has a total of 39 service aces for the season.

Some advantages North Dakota has over UNO include their higher ranking in the NCC and the more experienced players on their roster. The upperclassmen athletes also run the show for North Dakota. Junior Kate Cahill leads UND with 3.29 kills per game. Cahill is also second on the team in blocking. Sophomore Liza Sorteberg leads North Dakota with 2.96 digs per game.

Freshman Jenny Rankin and junior Jewelia Grennan are still leading the Mavs. Grennan notches 3.09 kills per game, while Rankin averages 2.74 per game. Rankin also records 2.83 digs per game and Grennan leads the Mavs with 18 total service aces.

With four freshmen continuously playing on the floor and several key players injured, the Mavs will have an uphill battle on the road this weekend in an attempt to snap their three-game losing streak.

The Mavs finally return to the friendly confines of Sapp next weekend with two more conference opponents. B

Maverick hockey drops the puck on 2001 season

Brian Brashaw

Hockey

UNO hockey in Kearney, eh? Well ... yeah. The Maverick hockey team will host their annual exhibition with the University of Manitoba Bison at the Tri-City Arena in Kearney this year. It will be the first "home away from home" situation for the Mav hockey program.

The idea behind the exhibition is to get support for UNO hockey to a more westward end of the state, as well as to break in the citizens of Kearney for the upcoming hockey season. The Tri-City Storm will soon be starting their second season in the USHL, the same league the Omaha Lancers and Lincoln Stars belong to.

The focus Friday, however, will be college hockey. The Mavs bring a four game-winning streak over the Bison to the stage, including a 6-1 victory last season at the Civic Auditorium (the Aud).

This will be the sixth meeting between the two teams, with UNO having a 4-1 edge.

Mike Kemp will again be taking the head coach role, beginning his fifth year with the Mavs, and 22nd season coaching college hockey. His record with the Mavericks is at 63-76-13, including a two-year Central Collegiate Hockey Association conference record of 25-22-3.

The Mavericks lose a double digit number of seniors, so a young squad will be skating for UNO. However, a very talented team comes storming into Kearney, including four National Hockey League draftees at the blue line. Junior Greg Zanon leads the defense as assistant captain of the team. Under him will be Mike Gabinet and Bryce Lampman, both 2001 NHL draftees, and in net, CCHA All-Rookie team goaltender Dan Ellis.

The Mavericks are looking to build the team from the net out. The positive thing is that the "out" part isn't too shabby, either. Captain David Brisson brings his 79 points in 83 games onto the Mav offensive attack. Brisson and Jeff Hoggan will be the go-to guys for the Maverick offense. Andrew Wong, with a team record six game-winning goals last season also looks to have a breakout year.

This will be the only opportunity the Mavs have to prepare for the second annual Maverick Stampede. This year, UNO brings in Michigan, Providence, and Minnesota-Duluth for the season-starting tourney, won last year by eventual national champions Boston College.

The Mavericks will open the Stampede on Oct. 12 at 8 p.m. against Minnesota-Duluth, with game time for the Oct. 13 game to be determined. B

Fun with spell check

Brian Brashaw

Bill Gates is a genius, right? Actually, not so much. Seems when Microsoft Word was being made, somebody forgot to factor in the problem of proper names in spellcheck. It's always fun when writing sports to do spellcheck, because the names just don't translate. Here are some examples of what Microsoft Word 5.0 did to these athletes from the pro levels and from the UNO rosters:

The Raf report

Raf Czarnecki

A quarter of the way through the fall semester, and I've noticed an overwhelming amount of support (mainly bags of fan mail in the Gateway office) shown toward the Raf Report. I'm very flattered, and to an extent, amazed by all the time you folks have put into sending me letters full of encouraging comments and photos (some photos are not exactly sports related, but keep them coming). To show my appreciation, I'd like to take a few of the popular questions sent to me regarding the current college football season, and shed some light on what we can expect to occur in the future as well.

It's what I do.

Somebody break up the Bulldogs. No, not Mississippi State, Georgia or Louisiana Tech, but rather the Bulldogs of Fresno State, this year's "Cinderella Story." After surprise road wins at Colorado and Wisconsin and a thumping of Oregon State (I'm thinking Sports Illustrated feels pretty stupid these days), the Bulldogs are climbing the Top 25 polls as well as the "Come Jump the Bandwagon" polls. Unfortunately, their strength of schedule will hurt them in the poll that matters most, the Bowl Championship Series. However, if Fresno State ends up undefeated, you can bet there will be a case made to get them into the Rose Bowl. Of course, this would all go away if Hawaii decides to come up and beat the Bulldogs in their backyard. Ah, the WAC Conference, you gotta love it.

Bold prediction of the week coming up in one second: A quarterback will win the Heisman Trophy this year! Yeah, I said it. I picked Woody Dantzler at the beginning of the year, and contrary to popular belief, I'm not a man to go back on my word. But if Woody fails (that didn't come out right), there are a few other candidates ready to take home the coveted trophy. Florida's Rex Grossman is on pace to throw for like 3,500 yards, 35 touchdowns and break all the records ... yada yada yada. Bottom line — Grossman, Ken Dorsey of Miami or David Carr of the above mentioned Fresno State Bulldogs will win, and they all have one thing in common — they throw footballs far.

People talk about how hard it is to win this Heisman Trophy. Give me some fast receivers and I'm in.

Free Association is Big Time ... Florida State ... it's going to feel strange not finishing in the Top Five this year, ay?

Best coach in America ... Bob Stoops

7-0 ... Bob Stoops' record against Top 10 teams while at Oklahoma

#5 ... the ranking of the team that will beat Oklahoma this week — go Texas?!

Terrible, yet entertaining ... The Big 10 Conference

Joe Paterno ... Go away Washington State ... Are you serious?

Ell Roberson ... baller

Bob Davie ... job search

So what's on tap for this weekend? Texas versus Oklahoma in Dallas doesn't suck. Florida at LSU sounds like a winner. PAC 10 Football is always fun to watch while getting "primed" for an eventful Saturday evening.

Upset alert — Georgia over Tennessee and/or Arizona over Oregon. What, like you would have believed me when I said North Carolina was going to beat Florida State?

So what it all comes down to is this — before you go anywhere Saturday, consider sitting back down on your couch and recognizing that college football is more important than anything else you have to do. It's been real and late. ☺

- Sophomore forward Brandy McSorley is leading the Maverick soccer team with ten goals and 23 points ... as a substitute!
- The UNO football team is ranked No. 5 in NCAA Division II and holds a 5-0 record. One rather strange statistic is the Mavs have allowed 1,763 yards in total offense, while producing just 1,586 yards of total offense. Perhaps the +5 turnover margin has helped.
- The UNO women's golf team will play in the North Central Conference Meet Oct. 5-7. Three of the most consistent players are sophomores Stephanie Oster and Katie Merchant, and freshman Tanis Hastmann. Oster holds the low 36-hole mark this fall (162). Hastmann and Merchant have each turned in the low 18-hole rounds (78).
- The UNO volleyball team is struggling along with a 2-11 record. But don't blame the serving. The Mavs have recorded 85 ace serves this season, equal to the number put up by the opposition.
- The pass senior co-captain Chad Geiger intercepted and returned for a touchdown in Saturday's 29-27 win over Northern Colorado was his 10th career interception. The school record for career picks is 15, held by Gary Paporello.
- The last time the UNO volleyball team lost 11 games in a season was 1998 when the team finished 21-11. The Mavs have never before started 2-11.
- UNO's victory at Greeley did not come without a price. Co-captain Tyree Kellogg suffered a knee injury and had an MRI performed Sunday to determine the extent of the injury. Captain Buck Rasmussen was lost for the season with a knee injury suffered earlier this summer.

Comments: Once again, not much movement. UNMC loses, but by forfeit, so they stay there for now. After this week, NO MORE FREEBIES!! IF YOU FORFEIT, YOU LOSE YOUR SPOT!!! Sig Ep A squeezes by Hike by a point in an excellent defensive game. Should be a great game this week between Hike and the Graplers. He Hate Us continue to gripe about their ranking, buys, just play the game. Playoffs are in two weeks, and there should be plenty of good games between now and then.

Comments: Another boring week, but business is about to pick up. The big showdown between Hired Guns and Goodfells is this Sunday. We have a lot to say about that game, but apparently some players misinterpreted the casual fun intentions of this column last week. Sorry, we didn't realize you were so sensitive, as you broke into your third celebration of the game against five players. We will be much nice from now on. Tuesday night also promised a good game as the Red Haired Jimmy's take on a perennial powerhouse Trojans and see if they really do know what they are doing. Playoffs are in two weeks!!!
